Crossfield High School Pupils Visit Mr. Hultgren's Farm.

On Wednesday of last week Mr.
Morrow took the High School and Grade VIII out to Mr. Hultgren's farm for the first of a series of practical demonstrations in Agriculture.
The object of the visit was
to secure a knowledge of the dairy
type, and of the economic features
dairying.

Mr. Morrow expresses himself as being delighted with the success of the demonstration, which he says,
far exceeds his highest hopes.

Mr. Hultgren began the demonstration,
by exemplifying the dairy characteristics of the Holstein cow. By means of comparisons between several animals he gave a very clear exposition of what was most to be desired in the breeds whose commercial value lay in the production of milk and cream.

He then conducted the class
through the barns and dairy room,
where he explained the uses and advantages of each appliance, and tried to impress upon all the economic value of strict sanitary precautions
in the handling of the milk.

After the demonstration was over
Mrs. Hultgren very kindly entertained
the visitors to a light luncheon,
which included some of the Holstein
milk.

Mr. Morrow states that the great value of the lesson lay in its very practical nature. The class was taken through each feature of the industry, and was carefully shown how the science of dairying is related to its commercial success by a man who on account of his methods,
receives a bonus on the product he sells.

We understand that arrangements
are being made for similar classes,
with a view to making a study of the various types of farm stock.

An early excursion will be made to Mr. F. Colliett's ranch, where lectures will be given on the Hereford
as a beef type. It is also hoped that at the same time Mr. Taber will conduct a class in the characteristics of the Clydesdale horse.

The Squire's Sweetheart

KATHARINE TYNAN

WARD, LOCK & CO., LIMITED
London, Melbourne, and Toronto(Continued)
CHAPTER VI.

A Remembered Face

The Squire was not altogether easy in his mind about Mrs. Bartlett. At first she had worked in her garden and had seemed to find a certain happiness and to be gaining health. But soon after Hilary had come down for Easter Mrs. Brown came to the Squire with concern written on her good-natured face.

"There!" she said. "I thought I'd better let you know, sir, as you was kindly interested in the poor creature. It's about Miss Bartlett. A better woman I never saw all her work. The piles and piles she 'ave mended. I'd like some 'azy uzies as I know to see 'ow the pore dear works. You'd think she 'ad it on her mind to finish a task before she'd be going. These two weeks she's much left of her to go when she does, judg'd by the flesh falling from her bones as it's doing."

"What's the matter with Mrs. Bartlett?" the Squire asked, looking up from his book. "Oh, she ain't well, she ought to see a doctor. I expect it's the result of her accident. I'll see her today and persuade her to see a doctor."

He had not seen Mrs. Bartlett for some time. He had plenty of occupation, and of late a new occupation had been added, for he was sitting to Lionel Egerton for a portrait. It was a portrait that promised to take a long time, for Egerton made his money by black and white work, and took his painting as a luxury. The Squire was distressed at the leisurely manner in which the artist would spend a whole sitting painting something and then paint it out again. His conscientiousness troubled him, for he conjectured no great amount of money in the Egerton establishment. From a selfish point of view he enjoyed the sittings extremely—would have enjoyed them more if the door had opened often to let in Dolly Egerton's sleepily beautiful little face. To be sure, there were compensations. Nearly always at the end of the sitting Lionel Egerton would say, putting down his palette and brushes, "Let us go and see what Dolly is doing."

Dolly was doing some illustrations for Christmas. She would look up with a smile as her brother and the Squire came in. Sometimes she would be sitting doing nothing, with that air of sleepiness upon her which butted to her beauty. She would come out of her languor with an effort to receive them, and her brother would rally her, calling her Dolly the dreamer. At times her expression seemed to the Squire to be very sad, and he hid impulses at times to console her for he knew not what.

He had discovered for himself, as the intimacy increased, that the beautiful Mrs. Egerton was stupider—more than that, that she was exacting and selfish as well. Her curious beauty went no further than her outward appearance. She was lazy—by way of being delicate. In the understaffed New Cottage everyone might give a hand at the work—not Mrs. Egerton. To be sure she could not associate her with mental work. Her place in life was to sit still and look beautiful.

It was a quite amazing thing for the Squire to have discovered so much. Usually where the feminine part of human nature was concerned, his critical faculties, such as they were, were in abeyance. He rather wondered at himself that he could judge the beautiful beauty sitting in her moonlight blues and greens—a lovely thing to look at—so harshly. Perhaps his passionate pity for Dolly's clouded beauty had sharpened his perceptions.

He would remind himself when he had gone a certain distance in his own mind towards formulating his dislike for Mrs. Egerton, that at all events, she had not lost her husband's love: "and he is a jolly sight cleverer fellow than you," he would remind himself, for he had a great desire to be just.

Lionel Egerton obviously adored his wife, and looked on her as a precious creature whom the sordid cares of life must not be permitted to approach. He accepted unreservedly the fact of her delicacy, and he had a boyish zest in taking a hand in the work of the New Cottage. The village girl who came in every day to have her labors supervised and supplemented, else that "New Cottage" would have been run in a very slovenly manner. He would come in cheerfully and pick his way through the kitchen fire which Phoebe had allowed to go out; he would be washing salad; Phoebe could not be trusted with the washing of vegetables; or he had seen a coal or something else. Once he had been sweeping a chimney and came in black as a coal. Mrs. Egerton, playing with the child, a box of sweets and a novel within reach of her hand, had looked up and laughed.

"My dear child," she had said, "you are not fit for decent society. What will Mr. Meyrick think of you?" There was a morning when the painter's gaiety was replaced by a gloom. He had had a crop in the night, and he and Dolly had been up half the night.

"Granny" (it was his pet name for his wife) "never knew a single thing about it till it was all over," he said. "She slept right through. Wasn't it clever of us to pull the kid round without even wakening her mother? Let's go for a walk, Meyrick. My head's like cotton wool. 'You won't be lonely, Gran, will you?' 'Oh, no, I shan't be lonely.' Mrs. Egerton answered, stretching her hand for the novel. Susan, her niece, was fast asleep in the odd little cradle bed which stood in a corner of the hall. "Don't trouble on my account. But don't forget that the Eclipse drawing has to go by the afternoon post."

"I had forgotten all about it," returned her husband. "My dear, an excellent business woman," he went on, "though she don't look it. She keeps me up to my p's and q's. I'd always be painting things that nobody wants. She looks like Egerton, doesn't she, Meyrick?"

"I agree with you," Egerton said, going on to talk about Dolly and the fine times he and she had had in London and Paris before Granny came on the scene.

"It was a very good time," he said with a little sigh. "How we worked and how we played! We fed at restaurants in Soho or the Latin Quarter; we went to the cheapest seats in the theatres, and to all sorts of odd shows. We were never apart. By Jove, you couldn't have a pretty girl like Dolly leading the vic de Boheme in Paris without a brother at her elbow. I'm a thorough Bohemian for England; in Paris I have my prejudices of the bourgeois. I don't believe in a girl going her own way—not in Paris. It's another matter in safe, jog-trot old England."

Electrification Demand

If the railways are confronted with a need for more motive power, why not make it electric motive power? There is constantly increasing pressure in large cities for electrification. The next five years must see electrification begun in Chicago. Electric locomotives will have to be substituted for steam engines. To begin the substitution now will save the steam engines on the junk pile when the change has been accomplished.—Chicago Tribune.

"You farmers buy a good many gold bricks, eh?" "Yes, and you city fellows buy a good deal of swamp land. I guess things are about even."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

How to Fight Sow Thistle

Thorough Cultivation of Land and Clean Seed the Remedy.

In fighting sow thistle we must recognize that this weed spreads from both seeds and roots. We must therefore, prevent the plant from producing seed till the perennial stalk and sow absolutely clean seed grain if we are to control this terrible pest.

Various methods of attack have been advocated such as crowding out the weed by a persistent perennial, smothering the plant with the paper, straw, manure, or by a quickly growing crop, and starving the plant by preventing it from forming green leaves. The crowding out method often fails because the thistle proves to be more persistent than the crop employed to displace it. The smothering plan succeeds on small patches, but is not practicable on large areas. Many authorities advocate the starvation plan or summer fallow as by far the best for eradicating this troublesome weed.

Plough six to eight inches deep in the autumn, if possible, but if pressure of work prevents autumn ploughing, then plough the same depth about the middle of June. After a few days, begin the use of the duck-foot cultivator crosswise of the land and repeat whenever the tiniest shoots are ready to show, until the land freezes in autumn. Where the soil is loose loam the land may not need ploughing, and the cultivator can be used from the start.

Never allow the thistle to show even a leaf above the ground and by autumn it will be killed. If the cultivation must be thorough.

"The trouble with you, sir, is—if you will pardon me for saying so—that you think nobody good enough for your daughter." "Yes, sir, and that is where we differ so radically. You appear to think anybody is."

The Worth of

Germany's Word

Another Scrap of Paper Thrown to the Winds

The German chancellor himself communicates to the world the damning fact that having given the solemn pledge of May 4 Germany has passed the intervening months in feverish preparations to break it, to tear it up like another scrap of paper and throw it to the winds. In March the question was not ripe for decision, in May it was not ripe, and in that month the pledge was given, but now Germany is ready to enter upon a new career of assassination at sea. What has changed the situation, asks the chancellor, and answers his own question. The first, the most important effect, is that "the number of our submarines has been very considerably increased as compared with last spring, and thereby a firm basis for success has been established." Behind the shelter of her pledge, concealing her construction, she has been able to save as rumor was now and then brought some hint of it, the German government has availed itself of the opportunity of the submarine treaty to prepare for a resumption of lawless warfare.—From the New York Times.

Says Horse Famine Is Coming.

At least a million horses and mules have gone to Europe from the United States and are being destroyed in vast numbers. The war is not over, and they are still going over. When the war is over every country across the sea will need horses to work its farms and replenish its depleted breeding stock. With our surplus gone, American breeders asleep at the switch, and our own enormous consumption of horses for farm and city going steadily on, a horse famine is sure to ensue.—Corr. Breeders' Gazette.
